

FS Agreement No. 22-MU-11132546-003

Cooperator Agreement No. _____

MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING Between The
AMERICAN PUBLIC GARDENS ASSOCIATION
And The
USDA, FOREST SERVICE

This MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING (MOU) is hereby made and entered into by and between the American Public Gardens Association, hereinafter referred to as “APGA,” and the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA), Forest Service, hereinafter referred to as the “U.S. Forest Service.”

Title: Coordination in Support of Ecosystem, Plant, and Gene Conservation

PURPOSE: The purpose of this MOU is to document the cooperation between the parties to coordinate in a wide range of activities, including but not limited to, conducting assessments, inventory, collecting, monitoring and gene conservation activities, data acquisition and sharing, outreach, education, and other management activities necessary to conserve plants and their pollinators and ecosystems critical to sustaining biological diversity in accordance with the following provisions.

I. STATEMENT OF MUTUAL BENEFIT AND INTERESTS:

Both APGA and the U.S. Forest Service have responsibilities for and interests in the preservation, conservation and management of biological diversity and conservation education of the public

The U.S. Forest Service is a natural resource agency dedicated to the sustained management of the Nation's natural resources and providing service to people through Federal law and regulations administered by the Secretary of Agriculture. The U.S. Forest Service is responsible for managing habitats that maintain sustainable populations of plants and animals on approximately 193 million acres of National Forests and National Grasslands in 43 states, as well as its critical role in the management protection, and wise use of over 130 million acres of urban and community forest land. The U.S. Forest Service acquires, develops and disseminates up to-date information on proposed, threatened, endangered, sensitive, and candidate plant species' status, distributions, population trends, ecology, conservation needs, and stewardship. This information is essential to the U.S. Forest Service to implement management activities that conserve these natural resources both in situ and ex situ. The U.S. Forest Service accomplishes these mandates in part by utilizing the resources of APGA and its network of member institutions. The ex situ conservation services and resources provided by APGA and their network of member institutions are critical to the U.S. Forest Service as it strives to restore, maintain, and enhance population and habitats for over 422 species of plants and animals listed under the Endangered Species Act as proposed, threatened or endangered, and provides special management for over 2,000 plant species designated by the U.S. Forest Service as sensitive species or species of concern. Management of these vulnerable components and links in the biodiversity chain is crucial to implementing the U.S. Forest Service mission for land and resource management.

APGA is an association of public gardens, botanic gardens, arboreta, and other related spaces that are dedicated to, among other things, raising awareness of the critical importance of plant conservation and helping to ensure the conservation and restoration of rare, threatened, and endangered plants around the globe. APGA and its members understand the importance of saving plants from extinction. The work of botanical gardens and arboreta in partnership with land management agencies, universities, and other conservation organizations offers tremendous promise that will secure America's botanical heritage for our children. A Board of Directors manages APGA as a non-profit corporate entity. APGA members endeavor to promote the conservation of plants through public education, improved methods of in situ and ex situ conservation, implementation of small population management research and other development efforts that are leading to an increased understanding of plant conservation needs. APGA and its network of gardens and arboreta provide valuable information and services to government and non-government organizations, scientists, land managers and the public.

The U.S. Forest Service and APGA desire to work on a broad range of cooperative projects in areas of mutual interest.

It is the desire of both parties to cooperate fully with each other, including exchange of personnel and other resources, in matters relating to the conservation and management of plant species and the conservation of their habitats and ecosystems through cooperative efforts that are likely to include, but are not limited to:

2. Training of Forest Service personnel and APGA members in newly emerging areas of imperiled species restoration, recovery, and management;
3. Identification of special management areas (Research Natural Areas and Botanical Special Interest Areas, for example);
4. Production of grants and agreements, reports, abstracts, and other materials;
5. Input to natural resource planning projects of mutual interest;
6. Assistance to and partnerships with foreign, state and tribal governments, private landowners, communities, and other non-governmental organizations;
7. Demonstration of innovative land management practices, including those that facilitate international conservation of at-risk plant species, forests, parks, watersheds and protected areas as well as the use of prescribed fire, sustainable forestry, grazing, and other techniques;
